

I am against wire-tapping of any sort, especially when requests are made to make it "easier" for the government to do so. As a computer professional, I'll work to keep my communications private.

You may ask, what about wiretaps on the bad guys? I'm for it.. if you can prove, to a judge, that a wiretap is warranted, then go for it. However, that same proof should be made available to the person being wiretapped within six months of the warrent. This creates accountability - either you prosecute the offender, or you tell them you were listening in on their private converstations.

-Dave Saunders
Twinsburg, OH